Fulda, Germany

I held my candle high, as I, along with hundreds of other worshippers who had crammed into the 10th Century cathedral in Fulda, Germany for a 10 p.m. service, worshipped the coming of Lord, Jesus Christ.

All around, in a language I did not understand, stood Germans paying homage to our common God and his Son. It was a common love that bound the hundreds of us together that night. Me, the lone American service member, and the hundreds of fellow Christians.

After the worship service, I began the three mile walk to my apartment building that stood on a hillside overlooking the city of Fulda. As I was walking, I wasn't thinking about the time as I just wanted to get home for it was very cold.

Walking up Haimbacher Strasse, I reached the point where the city ended and the vast farm fields began. And there, on top of the hill, I stood alone. With my God, the Heavens above, and a moon that illuminated the snow covered farm fields.

Out of what seemed to be a clear sky, wisps of snow began falling to earth, and almost on cue, the bells from all the cathedrals in Fulda began chiming out the news of the Christ Child's birth. It was if all God's visual and audio creations had come together at this time, at this place for me, to share in the celebration. The bells. The stars. The moon. The snow. And one human being among the billions would be a witness to all of this.

It was a symphony of the senses composed but for one American service member. I must have stood on the side of the street for almost 30 minutes. Looking and listening. Not one car passed. I was truly alone.

The, I walked the rest of the way home.

Upon entering my small one room basement apartment, I opened a bottle of Blue Nun wine and poured myself a glass. Lighting a small Christmas tree, I then raised my wine glass and with tears in my eyes (for I was overwhelmed by what I had just seen and heard) I silently said "Merry Christmas."
